A HIGHLAND ANECDOTE.

BY SIR WALTER SCOTT. BAR'T.

The same course of reflection which led me to transport to you the account of the deat. of an ancient bor ierer, biduces me to ad the particulars of a singular incident, efford ing a point which seems highly qualified to be illustrated by the noncil. It was suggesby the spirited engraving of the Gor Huntsman, which adorned his first minos of your work, and perhaps bears the close resemblance to the character of that proto admit of your thoosing it as a subject for another. Of this you are the only competent judge:

story is an old, but not an ancient one: the actory is an old, but not an ancient one: the actor and sufferer was not a very ager man, when I heard the anecdote in my ear-ly youth. Dencet, for so I shall call him-had been engaged in the affin of 1716. With been engaged in the affair of 1746, with others of nie class, and was supposed, by many, to have been an accomplice, if not tiprincipal actor, in a certain tragic affun which made much boise a good many years tragic affun after the rebellion. I am content with indi-cating this, in order to give some idea of the man's character, which was bold, fierce and enterprising.—I races of this natural disposition still remained on Dancau's very good features, and in his keen grey eye. But the limbs, like those of the aged borderer in my former tale, had become unable to serve the purposes, and obey the dictates, of his inch nation. On the one side of his body he retained the proportions and firmness of an active mountaineer; on the other he was a disabled cripple, scarce able to limp along the streets. The cause which reduced him to this state of infirmity was singular:

The state of infirmity was singular:

Twenty years or inore before I knew Duncan, he assisted his brothers in forming a large grazingt in the highlands, comprehending an extensive range of mountain and forest, land morass, take and precipice, It chanced that a sheep or goat was missed from the flocks and Duncar, not satisfied with despatching his shepherds in one direction, went himself in quest of the fugitive in another.

In the course of his researches, he was in duced to ascend a small and narrow path, leading to the top of a high precipice. Dangerous as it was at first, the road became doubly so as he advanced. It was not much more than two feet broad, so rugged and difficult, and, at the same time, so terrible, that it would have been impracticable to any but the light step and steady brain of a highlander. The precipide on the right rose like a wall; and on the left sank to a depth which it was giddy to look down upon; but Buncan passed cheerfully on; now whistling the Gathering of the Clan, now taking heed to his footneps; when the difficulties of the path particularly required caution. denbly so as he advanced. It was not much

Jo this manner he had more than half ascended the precipice, when in midwig, and it might almost be said, in midlife air, he the countered a buck of the red deer species, sun ning down the cliff by the saing path, in opposite direction. If Duncan had had a more renontre could have been more agreeable but as he had not the wilderness, the meeting we in its middle and the power of retreating, sfor the sieg had not room to tarm himselt in the hisrow path, and if Duncan had turned has back to go down, he knew enough of the creature's habits to be certain that he would rish upon him while energed in the difficulty of the great that. They stood, therefore, perfectly still,
